Building Trust, Charting Growth

Trust across the whole spectrum of stakeholders remains an overly critical element for companies to get to growth. Trust is also important for a strong industry-government engagement. Economic growth remains vital for all stakeholders in these challenging times and to build growth rates that can be sustained, industry and government must create engagement platforms to strengthen the partnership. Where is Global Growth Headed in 2021?

COVID-19 has hugely impacted global economic prospects. China, which has managed to stem the spread of the pandemic, seems to be on the mend. However, most of the other countries are struggling to crank up the struggling economy and there are no indications of any positive growth in 2020 for most nations. Forecasts, however, show that 2021 will see a revival for nearly all countries, across continents. How and by when will the global economy get back on track? Can India use the lessons learnt during the pandemic to build a base for sustainable and high growth rates in the next few years?

Session 4

The India Advantage

The Covid-19 pandemic has underlined the need for India to move away from being over reliant on global supply chains for essential products like PPE kits, ventilators, API's, etc. that could have been easily manufactured in India. The Prime Minister has called for building a "Self-Reliant India" or ATMANIRBHAR BHARAT and to become more vocal for local. The Government's intent is to reduce India's over dependence on imports, especially from a single source & is a step in the right direction. However, at the same time it will be important for India to remain engaged with the global supply chains to sustain a high growth economy. How can the current emphasis on self-reliance be tailored to ensure India's continued presence in global markets? How can transnationals that have invested in India benefit in the emerging policy eco-system without any fear of getting bogged down by rules and regulations that may lead to tariff or non-tariff measures? How can India take a leadership role in the world by ensuring that self-reliance is not dictated by narrow domestic considerations but by a vision to make industry in India globally competitive? How do US companies perceive this initiative of self-reliance? How does progress in strategic relationship between India & US translate to enhancement of trade and trust in business?

Concluding Session & Way Forward

The world order seems to have changed for good and India now stands at a point in its history when it has to make very hard choices as the neighbourhood challenges have only aggravated. While the global upheaval provides India an opportunity to become a leading power, it also has to decide who it can trust. Building trust is not a short term process, so what choices should India — battling economic slowdown and a volatile neighbourhood — make to find its due place in the world?

What kind of power will India be?
