

Kainaath Arif is a Political Science scholar at Lady Shri Ram College for Women, University of Delhi, and a policy researcher, writer, and multimedia artist interested in the intersections of artificial intelligence, public policy, gender, and climate.

She works with AI Commons, where she focuses on building spaces for young people to engage with AI not merely as users or audiences, but as equal and participative stakeholders in conversations about how the technology is designed, governed, and experienced. Her work explores questions of AI governance, digital rights, bias, access, and the social and political implications of emerging technologies, with a particular interest in making complex policy conversations more accessible to young people.

Her research interests also extend to gender and climate policy, and she has explored questions of gender- and disability-sensitive AI through an ICSSR research internship. She is a YLAC Policy in Action Fellow, Millennium Fellow, and PM-YUVA awardee.

When she isn't thinking about how to solve the polycrisis, she spends her days reading, sketching, and watching far too many movies.
