Synopsis

The reforms process for the telecom sector was started in September last year, when the government announced a slew of structural reforms including redefining adjusted gross revenue (AGR) definition. It was followed by reforms in the wireless promotion and coordination (WPC) wing and more recently the right of way rules (RoW).

Telecom Minister Ashwini Vaishnaw

Thursday said the government will bring in at least three more legislations, so that the entire digital regulatory system in the country comes at the level of global standards. To start with, licensing reforms will follow the enactment of Telecommunications Act.

"In a very methodical way, we are moving step by step. By end of which, we should see India's telecom sector, among the best in the world," Vaishnaw said during a Public Affairs Forum of India (PAFI) event.

10 Members Love Us

The stalwarts of the industry trust ET Prime for insightful analysis & unbiased thought pieces

Given the information overload these days and a rapidly changing business environment, you look out for analyses that draw perspective and insights. ET Prime is one such platform that has raised the bar in providing this analyses consistently and have redefined journalism away from just reporting. I have had many conversations with their journalists in the areas of Fintech, Consumer and Banking and have come out quite impressed with the depth of their understanding. Infact their reporting on Fintech has been quite prescient.
